

Once They Said Pearl Harbor Couldn't Be Attacked.

Now They Say We Are Safe from Missiles.

Before December 7, 1941, some people thought the possibility that Pearl Harbor could be attacked was so remote as to be laughable.

Today, some people say the United States need not worry about a ballistic missile attack. They say building a missile defense system is unnecessary... even laughable.

But today, 25 nations are feverishly working to get nuclear missiles, and many are dangerous and unstable countries like North Korea, Iran and Iraq.

Yet President Clinton and Vice President Gore have strongly opposed building a missile defense system throughout most of their administration.

As a result, America still has no defense against missile attack. Some people have never learned the lessons of Pearl Harbor.

Now, with elections nearing, Clinton and Gore say maybe we do need a missile defense, but only a very limited system to be built years in the future...and only if Russia gives its permission.

As President Clinton embarks on a summit meeting with Russian President Vladimir Putin, we urge the President to remember the lessons of Pearl Harbor.
